

Contribution ID: 241

Type: Presentation

Effect of film thickness on pulsed laser deposited optically selective solar absorbers

Carbon nanotubes embedded in NiO have been ablated onto aluminium by varying deposition time/thickness using pulsed laser deposition for selective solar absorber coatings. It has been noted that the absorptance increases as the thickness increases for all carbon concentrations. A maximum solar absorptance of 91 % has been achieved so far.

Primary author: Mr YALISI, Brian (CSIR, UKZN)

Co-authors: Prof. FORBES, Andrew (CSIR, UKZN); Mr TILE, Ngcali (CSIR, UKZN); Dr KITTESSA, Roro (CSIR)

Presenter: Mr YALISI, Brian (CSIR, UKZN)

Track Classification: Track F - Applied and Industrial Physics