

Contribution ID: 79

Type: Presentation

Photo-transfection and selective optical differentiation of embryonic stem cells

Due to their self-renewal and pluripotency characteristics, stem cells possess the potential to dramatically advance current therapies in tissue regeneration and engineering. In this work, we report for the first time that femtosecond laser pulses can be utilised for successful transient photo-transfection and differentiation of mouse embryonic stem cell colonies.

Primary author: Dr MTHUNZI, Patience (CSIR - NLC)

Co-authors: Dr GUNN-MOORE, Frank (University of St. Andrew); Prof. DHOLAKIA, Kishan (University of St. Andrew)

Presenter: Dr MTHUNZI, Patience (CSIR - NLC)

Track Classification: Track C - Lasers, Optics and Spectroscopy